Fact of the Case

The appellant, Church of God (Full Gospel) in India, had established a church in the K.K.R. Majestic: Colony in Madras (now Chennai). The Church used loudspeakers and public address system for prayer meetings, worship services, and other religious activities. The respondents, K.K.R. Majestic: Colony Welfare Association, represented the residents of the colony, who complained about the excessive noise pollution caused by the church's activities.

1. Whether the Church's activities were protected under Article 25 of the Indian Constitution, which guarantees freedom of conscience and free profession, practice, and propagation of religion.
2. Whether the Noise Pollution (Regulation and Control) Rules, 2000, were applicable to the Church's activities.
3. Whether the Church had taken sufficient measures to minimize the noise pollution.

The residents alleged that the noise level exceeds the prescribed limits, causing disturbance to their peace and silence. They approached the Madras High Court, seeking an injunction to restrain the church from using loudspeakers and public address systems.

Judgement

The Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision, held that the Church's use of loudspeakers and public address systems did indeed constitute a nuisance, causing noise pollution that infringed upon the resident's Right to a Peaceful Environment.

Issues

The primary issue before the Supreme Court was whether the church's use of loudspeaker, and public address systems constituted a nuisance, causing noise pollution that infringed

The Court observed that while the Church's activities were protected under Article 25, this freedom was not absolute and was subject to reasonable restrictions. The Court held that the Noise Pollution (Regulation and Control) Rules, 2000, were applicable to the Church's activities and that the Church had failed to comply with these rules.

The Court directed the Church to take necessary steps to reduce the noise level and to ensure that the noise pollution did not exceed the prescribed limits. The Court also suggested that the Church could use alternative methods, such as using soundproof equipment or restricting the use of loudspeakers in specific times of the day.

Ratio-Decidendi

The Supreme Court's decision was based on the following reasoning:

1. Right to a peaceful environment: The Court held that the residents had a Right to a peaceful environment, which was being disturbed by the Church's activities.
2. Noise Pollution Laws: The Court held that the Noise Pollution (Regulation and Control) Rules, 2000, were applicable to the Church's activities and that the Church had failed to comply with these rules.
3. Balancing Individual Rights: The Court balanced the Individual's Right to Freedom of Religion with the Community's Right to a Peaceful Environment.
4. Reasonable Restrictions: The Court held that the restrictions imposed on the Church's activities were reasonable and necessary to protect the Resident's Right to a Peaceful Environment.

Relevant Laws and Cases

1. The Environment (Protection) Act, 1986: This Act provides the framework for controlling noise pollution in India.
2. The Noise Pollution (Regulation and Control) Rules, 2000: These rules prescribe the certain limit of noise in residential, commercial, and industrial areas.
3. Appa Rao, M.S. v. Government of Tamil Nadu and another (1995): This case laid down guidelines for controlling noise pollution and the use of amplifiers and loudspeakers.<sup>172</sup>

4. Om Birangana Religious Society v. The State and others (1995-1996): The Court held that the Rights of the petitioner, or any religious association, are not absolute and also highlights the balance between Religious Freedom and the need to maintain Public Order
5. Article 21: Right to live in Pollution Free Environment as a part of Fundamental Right to Life under Article 21. (M.C. Mehta v. Union of India (1987)).
6. Article 25 and 26 of Indian Constitution: These Articles guarantee Freedom of Conscience and the Right to Freely Profess, Practice, and Propagate Religion.
7. Public Interest Litigation (PIL): The court entertained a petition filed by a welfare association on behalf of the residents of a colony.

Significance and Impact

The judgement has significant implications for religious institutions, noise pollution, and the interpretation of noise pollution laws in India.

The Court's decision:

1. Establishes a precedent: The judgement sets a precedent for future cases involving noise pollution and religious institutions.
2. Balances Individual Rights: The Court's decision balances the Individual's Right to Freedom of Religion with the Community's Right to a Peaceful Environment.
3. Interprets Noise Pollution Laws: The Court's interpretation of the Noise Pollution (Regulation and Control) Rules, 2000, provides clarity on the application of these rules to religious institutions.
4. Promotes Environmental Protection: The Court's decision promotes
